In Numbers

- 3,977 people infected with COVID-19 in Colombia & 189 deaths as of 19 April
- 1.82 million Venezuelan migrants in Colombia
- 381,433 people confined or with mobility restrictions due to internal violence in 2019

Highlights

- The first case of COVID-19 in Colombia was confirmed on 06 March, and since then the national Government and local administrations have taken strict containment measures: The country’s lockdown has been extended until 11 May and all non-essential domestic travel is prohibited; gatherings of over 50 people are not permitted and school activities are suspended until 31 May.
- These measures have contributed to the slowing of infection rates; however, they have also severely impacted the livelihoods of already vulnerable people across the country, including Venezuelan migrants. Measures have also affected WFP regular operations.
- WFP has rapidly adapted its operational setting to ensure assistance continuity to those most in need while also identifying new COVID-related needs and scaling up operations to address them. WFP urgently requires additional funding to support over 500,000 newly affected people as a temporary measure in the context of COVID-19, including migrants and poor people in urban areas.

WFP Operations

- WFP is implementing a comprehensive two-track approach in light of the escalating COVID-19 emergency, based on two primary objectives:
  - Sustaining current operations: WFP will maintain its assistance to some 300,000 Venezuelan migrants and host communities, as well as its assistance to approximately 40,000 people affected by armed violence every month; school feeding programmes in support of 110,000 children in La Guajira and other departments will also continue. Operational adaptations include the provision of cash-based transfers and in-kind food; the shift to the provision of take-home rations for school feeding programmes; double distributions to avoid unnecessary movement and; the closure of most community kitchens supporting migrants to avoid large gatherings in compliance with the Government’s public health measures.
  - Scaling up to addressing rising needs: The socioeconomic effects of the COVID-19 emergency have increased needs across all fronts, especially among poor people with informal jobs in urban areas. In response, WFP plans to scale-up assistance to reach an additional 300,000 newly affected Colombians; some 150,000 Venezuelan migrants as a temporary measure to support a transitional phase during COVID-19; 28,000 more Venezuelan schoolchildren with school feeding; some 35,000 more people with shock-responsive social protection and; 12,000 additional victims of armed conflict every month.

Situation update

- The Colombian Government has called for increased international support to assist Venezuelan migrants amidst the COVID-19 crisis. As of 06 April there were 1.82 million Venezuelans in Colombia, nearly 60 percent of which are in an irregular migratory status.
- Due to the dire socioeconomic consequences of the COVID-19 outbreak, groups of Venezuelan migrants have started to return to their country through the bordering departments of Norte de Santander and Arauca. Migrants in transit face food insecurity and increased exposure to COVID-19 contagion.
- Despite a ceasefire announced by the National Liberation Army (ELN), active combat has caused further displacement and confinement in Chocó, Norte de Santander, Nariño and Valle del Cauca.
- Although an array of support measures have been put in place by the national and local administrations, protests and roadblocks have sparked across the country, calling for immediate relief assistance by the Government of Colombia.
Sustaining operations

- WFP is providing life-saving food assistance in 15 departments: Antioquia, Arauca, Atlántico, Caquetá, Cauca, Cesar, Chocó, Córdoba, Cundinamarca, La Guajira, Magdalena, Nariño, Norte de Santander, Putumayo and Valle del Cauca.
- Distributions were briefly disrupted in mid-March amidst the COVID-19 containment strategy, however WFP was quick to adapt its operations to the new circumstances and managed to resume planned distributions from the first week of April.
- Distributions are ongoing to reach 72,000 conflict and disaster-affected people in six departments. This includes some 20,000 confined people in the Catatumbo region, in Norte de Santander, which are receiving in-kind food baskets for three months.
- Support to migrants continues: Voucher distributions for some 130,000 beneficiaries a month have been adapted to comply with COVID-19 measures; in-kind food rations are also being distributed for 25,000 people living in the remote region of Alta Guajira; cash transfers are ongoing as planned for 1,400 migrants in the Nariño department, which borders with Ecuador, and beneficiaries are receiving a transfer equivalent to two-months assistance to avoid unnecessary movements and support the prevention of infections.
- Although most community kitchens along the borders with Venezuela and Ecuador have closed, others remain open and are still supporting vulnerable people with hot meals in La Guajira, Nariño and Norte de Santander. Some of these kitchens operate inside of shelters for vulnerable Venezuelan migrants.
- In coordination with the Ministry of Education, WFP successfully started providing take-home rations for some 110,000 children who previously received school meals in five departments. Distributions in La Guajira are underway and some 25,000 migrant children in Atlántico, Cesar, Magdalena and Norte de Santander will start receiving rations in the coming week.
- WFP has put in place a remote monitoring plan to ensure regular and COVID-related activities are properly monitored under the current circumstances.

Scaling up to address rising needs

- So far, WFP has received direct requests of support for nearly 830,000 people affected by the socioeconomic impacts of COVID-19. WFP has developed tailored targeting criteria and has initially prioritised assistance with cash-based transfers to 51,000 of these people with resources immediately available.
- The current crisis is particularly affecting the livelihoods of the urban poor, including migrants with precarious, often informal sources of income. In response to these situations, WFP has started expanding its operational area to the cities of Bogotá, Soacha, Cali and Palmira.
- WFP provided food rations to 5,000 vulnerable migrants and host communities in Soacha, a urban area in the greater Bogotá.
- Preparations are ongoing to provide cash transfers to 20,000 vulnerable migrants in Bogotá, the capital city of Colombia. These migrants will receive support for three months and to cover basic food and hygiene needs.
- WFP has provided relief support to returning Venezuelans in the bordering department of Arauca. Migrants receive emergency food kits with ready-to-eat foods enough for three days. Returnees will start receiving these kits upon their arrival in Norte de Santander as well. Kits are distributed following strict sanitary protocols.

Vulnerability Assessment

- WFP is conducting an analysis on the impact of the COVID-19 on the most vulnerable populations, aiming at informing prioritisation and targeting.
- WFP is supporting a Multisectoral Rapid Needs Assessment led by the Inter-Agency Group for Mixed Migratory Flows (GIFMM) to identify needs of Venezuelans migrants. The analysis will be conducted by WFP, IMMAP, REACH and UNCHR.
- WFP, jointly with FAO, is conducting a Market Functionality Index Rapid Assessment in 14 Colombian departments. Initial market monitoring performed by WFP showed prices of basic staples have increased between 10 and 15 percent since the beginning of the crisis.

Inter-Agency coordination

- WFP is actively participating in inter-agency planning exercises for the COVID-19 response, coordinated by OCHA and the Inter-Agency Group for Mixed Migratory Flows (GIFMM).
- WFP co-leads the Food Security Cluster and the Cash Working Group in Colombia, together with FAO and the Colombian Red Cross, respectively. WFP also actively participates in the Education and Early Recovery clusters.
- A Logistics Working Group, led by WFP, has been created to streamline information and strengthen coordination in support of more efficient logistics processes, 20 partners have registered to date. WFP also steers the newly created Inter-Agency Procurement Group together with PAHO and UNDP.
